2000 Census Recruiting

The Census Bureau conducts a national count every decade, but the effort is ultimately a local one and recruiting quality local employees is "job one" for the Census Bureau right now.

It just makes sense that local people know their neighborhoods and communities. The Census Bureau depends on this local expertise for the most accurate count possible, and that means thousands of temporary jobs in our region over the next two years.

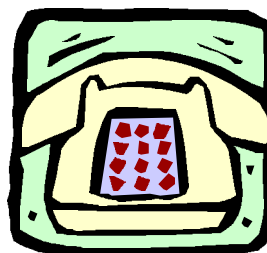

For instance, the Bureau is now looking for people who will help create accurate address maps and lists for the 2000 Census. In non-urban areas and areas where there are a significant amount of non "city-style" addresses (such as post office box delivery), the Census Bureau will create its own address list by sending employees into the field late summer and fall.

It is in the best interest of the local jurisdictions that these employees be familiar with their surroundings and take that local knowledge into the field with them to create accurate lists.

Ideal candidates will have good interviewing and communications skills, be able to read and update maps, have the ability to travel within the assignment area, have access to a car, have a valid driver's license and be able to work evenings and weekends. Pay ranges from $6.50 to $12.50 an hour for these jobs.

In the spring of 1999, the Census Bureau will need employees to canvass blocks in urban areas to check address lists.

During recruiting periods, regional census staff members will also be looking for space to test candidates and to train new employees. If you have space available in your community or if you are willing to help advertise jobs, call the toll-free phone number at the Denver Regional Census Center, (888) 325-7733.
